21st Century Evangelicals
A snapshot of the beliefs and habits of evangelical Christians in the UK - Summer 2015

Good news for the poor?

Research by the Evangelical Alliance
21st Century Evangelicals is the Evangelical Alliance’s ongoing study into the beliefs, habits and practices of evangelical Christians in the UK today. It all began when we surveyed 17,000 evangelicals in 2010, and since then our findings have been helping churches, Christian leaders and organisations better understand believers, enabling the Church to make effective plans for mission and ministry.

In partnership with the organisations in our Research Club, we have surveyed our online panel on a range of topics from discipleship to church life, evangelism to the family, work to education and money to globalisation. This poverty report is the thirteenth in our series.

• Faith in politics? (Spring 2015)
• Are we good neighbours? (Summer 2014)
• Time for discipleship? (April 2014)
• Working faithfully? (October 2013)
• Life in the church? (May 2013)
• Do we value education? (February 2013)
• Confidently sharing the gospel? (November 2012)
• Does money matter? (September 2012)
• The world on our doorstep? (May 2012)
• How’s the family? (February 2012)
• Are we communicating? (December 2011)
• Does belief touch society? (September 2011)
• 21st Century Evangelicals (January 2011)

During November 2014, 4,167 members of our panel were invited to complete our online survey on the theme of poverty. Additional respondents were recruited via an open invitation on the website and through social media networks. By the end of the month 1,853 people had responded.

A total of 1,607 (88.8%) described themselves as evangelical Christians, and this report is based on these evangelicals.

WHAT HAVE WE FOUND?

Material poverty
Although most evangelicals are financially comfortable, one in 10 have previously been in serious debt problems (page 10). More than three quarters believe that local churches should organise themselves to share their wealth so that no members experience serious poverty. Very few support the idea that being faithful to God means we will prosper materially, and most believe that God is on the side of the poor and the oppressed (pages 6-7).

Many are volunteering or giving to help those who are materially poor, believing we will be judged harshly if we neglect them. And more than four in 10 are praying regularly for or with people facing poverty in the UK (pages 18-19). Evangelicals have very different views of what causes poverty in the developing world compared to the UK – naming structural causes such as corruption and educational inequality abroad, and more personal factors such as addictions and family breakdown within the UK (pages 14-15).

TO DISCUSS:
What material goods would you struggle to live without? Why do we tend to think that poverty overseas is caused by injustice and corruption but that poverty in the UK is caused by personal factors? How would you summarise what the Bible teaches about poverty?

Relational poverty
Evangelicals are aware of the relational elements of poverty, considering family breakdown to be a top cause of both local and UK poverty (pages 14-15). And they see the Church as having an important role in tackling poverty and being a place where people of different income levels fellowship together (pages 22-23).

Many evangelicals are directly involved in tackling poverty. In the past year a quarter have given long-term support or befriended someone who is in poverty, 37% have volunteered with a Christian poverty project and 9% have helped with a secular project (pages 18-19). However only one in 10 are inviting poor people into their homes for a meal or intentionally living in a poorer area in response to God’s call. Many also admit to treating others differently because of their social status.

TO DISCUSS:
Is your church a community where richer and poorer people share their lives and resources with one another? What can you do to build relationships with poor and marginalised people in your community?

Spiritual poverty
Evangelicals are also concerned with spiritual poverty, with many feeling that the UK is spiritually deprived. But evangelicals recognise that the Church must meet both spiritual and material needs, with just 14% agreeing that it is more important to share the gospel with poor people than to meet their material needs (pages 6-7).

While the Church getting involved in social action is seen as an important way of tackling poverty in the UK, evangelicals also recognise that their churches are often poor at discipling or giving leadership opportunities to those in poverty (pages 16 and 22-23). In fact, two thirds admitted that churches are not good at evangelising the poorest – an issue examined at the Alliance’s February 2015 Council meeting. However, just over a quarter said that their church has seen people living in poverty come to faith in Christ in the last year.

TO DISCUSS:
Is your church effective at outreach and disciple-making in the less affluent parts of your community? How does the gospel challenge and offer good news to those who are materially rich but spiritually poor?

Responses to poverty
Volunteering and engagement with poverty issues is relatively high. In the past year 73% gave to a charity tackling poverty overseas and 70% donated food to a food bank (pages 18-19). Direct personal involvement in tackling poverty is slightly less common, with 56% giving to someone they know personally who is facing poverty and less than half volunteering with a poverty project. Evangelicals believe God cares about the poor and that they should too – with 45% saying they’ve continued to give despite facing financial difficulties – but many (39%) also admit feeling guilty for not helping when they could have (page 19).

Churches are tackling poverty in a range of ways, from running projects to raising money to praying for the poor. Half say that their church is committed to supporting a charity or ministry tackling poverty overseas, and 44% say that their church is working on a project to address poverty in their own community. But a quarter admit that their church does not do effective work to tackle poverty locally (pages 22-23).

TO DISCUSS:
Is your church making a difference to the lives of those in need? If you run social action projects, are these effective in tackling poverty? Or bringing people to faith? What is distinctive about Christian social action programmes?

The politics of poverty
Evangelicals are aware that the government alone can’t solve poverty, but also seem concerned about the impact of policies on the poorest and most vulnerable (pages 20-21). More than three quarters feel that government economic policy is hurting the poor more than the rich, and two thirds think that welfare reform policies are having a negative impact on the sick and disabled. More than two thirds also believe that economic policy is failing to raise most people’s income to meet the increased cost of living.

While evangelicals are concerned about welfare dependency and issues such as addictions and family breakdown, they are also much more sympathetic to welfare recipients than the national population (28% consider the welfare budget is too low compared with 15% of the general population). And while 56% agree that the government is right to withdraw benefits from those who cannot prove that they are willing to work, 46% do not think cutting welfare benefits is a good way to tackle poverty.

TO DISCUSS:
What policies would you like to see to address poverty in the UK? What poverty issues do you think Christians should be campaigning on?
How do evangelicals understand Biblical teaching on poverty?

- We should work for justice for the poor
- Everyone has a duty to work to support themselves and their family if they can
- God is on the side of the poor and the oppressed
- We will be judged harshly if we neglect to care for the poor
- God expects a more equal distribution of the world’s resources
- Spiritual poverty is a bigger problem than material poverty
- We should follow the example of Jesus and make most of our friendships among people who are poor and marginalised
- Our financial responsibility towards others is first to our family, then to fellow Christians in need and only then to poor people in the world
- We should do as Jesus said to the rich young ruler – sell all our possessions and give to the poor
- If we are faithful to God we will prosper materially
- The poor will always be with us, so there is not much hope of making an impact on poverty

We have a duty to pray for the poor, especially the marginalised and suffering.

Jesus didn’t tell everyone to sell their possessions and give to the poor, but he challenges some people to do that.

Less spiritual poverty leads to less material poverty.

If we are blessed materially it is so we can be a blessing.

Jesus didn’t tell everyone to sell their possessions and give to the poor, but he challenges some people to do that.

Less spiritual poverty leads to less material poverty.

Someone has to reach the middle class and wealthy too.
A commonly used research method in setting poverty levels is to ask people’s opinions on what levels of consumption are appropriate for an adequate standard of living. Our panel on the whole seem to have somewhat higher expectations than the general public, which is perhaps not surprising given that they are more affluent than average. The exception is that fewer evangelicals see a TV as necessary.

WHAT IS ESSENTIAL?

Which things do evangelicals think are necessary?

A safe, basically furnished (damp-proof) home

Nutritious food most days (such as vegetables and meat)

Heating to keep home adequately warm

A warm waterproof coat

Washing machine

To be able to pay an unexpected expense of £500

A small amount of money to spend each week on yourself

Car (or affordable use of a preferred means of transport)

Internet connection at home

Replace worn out clothes with new (not second-hand)

Mobile phone

Television

68% of our panel can afford all of these items

20% can afford all but choose to go without some

12% cannot afford all – particularly an unexpected expense

I believe that the Good News of Jesus Christ is the best news ever—for everyone, and that includes people with learning disabilities. I hope that you will consider holding a special Ability Sunday service in your church. Many people with learning disabilities have never heard about Jesus, and we need to give them that opportunity.

There is little poverty in my local area. I think people probably have considerable debt because of the desire to keep up with peers.

If you are born into a family with a poverty of aspiration and a lack of hope that is a huge disability to overcome.

In many countries, Christians face discrimination in the workplace and/or education, which makes them poor.

I think the UK has a far too generous welfare system. This had resulted in able people taking advantage of it.

Poverty is mainly about rich people taking from the poor the resources God has given us to share.

In our country, the overwhelming reasons are family breakdown and the loss of our Christian heritage. This is shown by many, many people who lift themselves out of poverty as soon as they find Christ.

I believe most people are poor stewards of what they have and expect to have everything now, even if it means personal debt.

Jesus is the answer, not the government.

This is a complex issue with no quick fixes. Too few governments have even tried to address this issue seriously.

Personal money management is vital, plus affordable housing.

Jesus’ mission to proclaim good news to the poor and set the captives free through the local church is the core of who we are. We empower churches to tackle the poverty and debt they see in their communities.

Lifting people out of debt and poverty
How have evangelicals personally responded to poverty in the last 12 months?

- Given money to a charity tackling poverty overseas: 73%
- Given food to a food bank: 70%
- Given a donation to an international disaster appeal: 67%
- Given money directly to someone you know personally who is in financial need: 56%
- Given money to a charity tackling poverty in the UK: 55%
- Prayed regularly for or with people who are facing poverty overseas: 45%
- Sponsored a child or other person who is facing poverty overseas: 44%
- Prayed regularly for or with people who are facing poverty in the UK: 42%
- Volunteered some time to a church project or Christian charity that aims to tackle poverty: 37%
- Contacted a politician or campaigned about an aspect of poverty in the UK: 34%
- Given money to someone begging on the street: 31%
- Bought food or drink for someone begging on the streets: 30%
- Contacted a politician or campaigned on international poverty issues: 30%
- Given long-term support to, or befriended someone, who is facing poverty: 27%
- Shared a meal in your home with someone who was hungry, destitute or homeless: 10%
- Fulfilled a calling to live or serve in a community facing poverty: 10%
- Been employed by or on the management group of an anti-poverty organisation or project: 9%
- Volunteered some time with a secular community project or charity which aims to tackle poverty: 9%
- Given money to an individual through an online scheme such as Acts435: 5%
Evangelicals are aware that the government alone can’t solve poverty, but also appear to be worried that the state is reducing, and concerned about the impact of policies on the poorest and most vulnerable.

- Governments round the world and throughout history have a poor record of distribution of resources equitably.
- Governments should act to ensure large companies can’t avoid paying their taxes
- The government should take stronger action to limit high interest rates on products such as pay day loans
- Current government economic policy is hurting the poor more than the rich
- Poorer people often find they have to pay more than average for items such as fuel, food, domestic appliances and insurance
- Welfare reform policies are having a negative impact on people who are disabled or sick
- Economic policy is failing to raise most people’s income to meet the increased cost of living
- The government is right to withdraw benefits payments if people cannot prove that they are willing to work
- Government is right to ask charities, communities and churches to deliver a greater proportion of welfare provision and support to people in need
- The “bedroom tax” or “removal of spare room subsidy” is a reasonable policy to address housing issues
- UK governments have a good record on policies to tackle global poverty
- Welfare reform policies are being successful in encouraging more people to take responsibility and get into jobs
- Current government economic policy is working well to produce a more prosperous future for all
- The government understands the needs of people who are carers for their family members and offers adequate help
- Spiritual poverty – the loss of our Christian heritage – is by far the biggest problem facing our country.
- I am involved with a food bank and am horrified at the number of people who need to use it and only live about five miles away.

Growing inequality is a major problem in the UK
In the UK our society and culture makes poor people feel ashamed and worthless
The UK welfare state is a good model for less developed countries in that it provides an adequate safety net so that no one need face extreme poverty
Compared with some overseas countries there is no significant poverty in the UK
Over the last few years my concern and giving of my money and time has become more directed towards poverty in the UK rather than overseas
The international community is making good progress in programmes to tackle global poverty

Our panel are less likely than the national population to think that the welfare budget is too high and should be reduced, and more likely to think that most people who rely on welfare benefits are victims of circumstances beyond their control. Comparative figures are taken from identically worded questions in YouGov polls for the Westminster Faith Debates.

*... whereby many people, and often whole families, get used to living off state benefits; the system needs to be radically changed to get such people to take more responsibility for their lives and their families.
*The benefits they receive are far from generous, and are the least a civilised society should provide in order to help them and their families avoid abject poverty.
Almost half (46%) say that their church is doing lots of good and effective work to tackle local poverty issues, but a quarter admit that their church does not do effective work to tackle poverty locally. Two thirds (66%) think that churches in the UK are not very good at evangelising and discipling the poorest in society.

I often see a love of money among parts of the Church and I am aware that it can influence me too.

Our church would rather raise £300,000 to reorder the pews, the floor and the organ.

I have decreased my regular giving to the Anglican Church I am part of... I can’t give to sustain an old building (beautiful and historic it may be) over immediate need in front of my eyes.

Because my church fails to reach out into the community, we don’t really know the extent of the poverty in our local area.

Everyone at my church is poor to very poor. My husband and I are amongst the most affluent and we earn about £1,200 gross between us. We share a meal on a Sunday because we all know some of us won’t have had any other food.

I’m so proud of the heritage of evangelical Christians, those who see the needs of impoverished people around them and don’t walk by, but rather do something about it.

From Lord Shaftesbury, William Booth and Elizabeth Fry to many of the men and women who took this survey, evangelicals believe that we have a responsibility to work for justice for the poor, and that we as the Church have a key role in tackling poverty in all its forms – material, relational and spiritual.

Today in the UK the gap between the rich and the poor is widening. As we found in our recent politics survey, evangelicals care deeply about the issue of poverty, considering poverty and inequality to be the single most important issue facing the UK. This report provides fascinating details on what UK evangelicals consider to be the causes and potential solutions for poverty, as well as their views on various government policies and details of how they and their churches are making a difference on the ground.

Many are directly involved in tackling poverty; donating to food banks, volunteering with poverty projects or supporting people they know who are struggling financially. But others admit that they or their churches are not really living out their beliefs; often being too concerned for their own needs or treating poorer people differently.

In fact, two thirds think that churches in the UK are not very good at discipling and sharing their faith with the poorest – an issue we examined during our February 2015 Council meeting.

The Church has a great track record of meeting social needs and bringing about change in society. Let this report encourage and inspire you as you consider how you and your church are responding to the realities of poverty and reaching out to the poorest in society.
